

QUESTION: What is an answer? And how can you measure the value of one?

Today, there are millions of people and places devoted to providing answers. And that's the problem. Answers are cheap. And everybody's got one. But trusted answers from trusted sources? That's a rare and precious commodity. Yes, they're out there but finding them on your own is becoming harder and harder. A reality made more urgent when entire industries are undergoing massive transformation, and opportunities are only opportunities if you can separate fact from near fact.
